- Range Hood - It's a simple box design that looks modern and is easy to construct. I made it from 1/16" basswood sheets and stained the outside. It's 3" wide and goes up to the ceiling. I like how, with all the blue and grey tones in the kitchen, it adds some much-needed warmth.
- Cabinets - While I love the opening feature of these cabinets, the uppers are a bit short for a modern kitchen and have a more traditional look than I wanted. I was able to modernize them by adding an additional open shelf under the uppers. It not only added extra height but also gave me the opportunity to display some of the glasses and cups. It's my favorite part of the kitchen. And I love how I can play with opening the doors to reveal the pantry goods, and then have my dishes on display! I did this with 1/8" basswood and painted it the same navy as the cabinets, and then I left the back open so you would see the beadboard sheets that I used on the wall.
- Countertop and Backsplash - I printed out a pattern on sticky paper and wrapped it around a piece of 1/8 acrylic (basswood, balsa, or MDF would work too).
- Pot filler - I used a gold spray paint on the pot filler and used crazy glue to adhere it to the wall. Nothing really special, but I do think spray painting is superior to using a paint brush on 3D prints.
